ABOUT

The life sciences industry faces a wide range of complex and constantly evolving legal issues. From raising capital to obtaining and securing its intellectual property, to complying with regulatory requirements applicable to developing and commercializing products, today's life sciences companies operate in a complicated legal environment

This program will provide current perspectives on legal issues that are important for small, mid-sized and larger life science companies, as well as universities and non-profits, with a focus on technology transfer issues, partnering and regulatory issues. This program will be geared to more experienced practitioners, though novices may find it interesting.
